EDITORIAL

MONEY

It is a good idea to make money in these times—or in any times. It is always to the advantage of a newspaper to sell enough ads in order to balance the expense of printing the news. But we believe that this is the first time in journalistic history that a newspaper staff has been clever enough not to go into any expense in printing the news. Indeed, we have at last solved the age-old problem of finances. It is very simple: as you see, there is no news or editorial content in this publication—unless you want to call this thing editorial content. Economy has met its culmination, and we are printing nothing but advertisements. We should make quite a haul on this issue—enough for the whole staff to go to the movies on. There's an old New England saying: "If you want to know what God thinks of money, look at the people he gives it to."

We seriously invite the attention of our readers to the advertisements, however, and thank those who have purchased them for their friendly support of the school paper. It will enable us to publish a large Carnival Issue.
